

Correction!

In the Fall 2015 (Vol. 45, Issue 4) online issue of Idiom, under the Promising Practices column, in the article “Engaging ELLs in Culture Activities in the Classroom,” under the subheading Three Research-Based Culture Activities, the last sentence in the next to last paragraph starting with “Imagine the tip of an iceberg . . .” should be deleted in its entirety due to a copy editing error. The sentence should have read:

Imagine the tip of an iceberg, which is visible, as referring to things that people have created, such as a culture’s literature, classical music, architecture, historical figures, and geography, as big “C” culture; then imagine the bottom of an iceberg, which is invisible, as referring to popular issues, opinions, viewpoints, preferences or tastes, as little “c” culture.
